The claim that 31,000 scientists do not believe in man-made global warming is just another of many deceptions by the fossil fuel companies. Of the 31,000 "scientists" who signed the document, very few were actual scientists, and almost none were climate scientists. Bear in mind that the people who circulated the document were creating a propaganda tool and wanted as many signatures as possible on it, so they made it as easy as possible to sign it. The only requirement was that you have a BS (Bachelor of Science) degree. You can have a BS in anything. It can be in dentistry, medicine, any branch of engineering, economics, business (Bachelor of Science in Religion Online Degree Program). It can be a regular BS degree, an online degree, or an even honorary degree. In fact, you do not really have to have a BS at all. The form merely asks you to check a prepared box that says you have one, with no verification. There is also no requirement that you are actually working in the field. In short, the 31,000 "scientists" are almost entirely ordinary people with no particular qualifications in climate science who, often motivated by political ideology, do not believe that humans are causing global warming. As an added detail, there is no attempt to prevent a person from signing it multiple times. Considering the low (almost nonexistent) standards for signing this document and the fact that this petition has been aggressively circulated since 1998, it is a wonder that it has collected only 31,000 "scientists" to sign a document saying the Earth is flat (a recent survey showed that about 60,000 Americans firmly believe the Earth is flat: Only Two-Thirds Of American Millennials Believe The Earth Is Round).
